LUXURY COFFINS FOR THE RICH & FAMOUS

NEW!

By CHAD ELLIOTT
Weekly World News

BOSTON, Mass. — You may not be able to take your money with you when you die, but, thanks to a revolution in the funeral industry, you can now travel to the Great Beyond in style.

Luxury coffins are becoming increasingly popular with the world's wealthiest citizens thanks to such modern conveniences as air-conditioning, televisions and CD players.

"They're the hottest new status symbol," says funeral home owner R.J. Branson. "It's no longer enough to have a better house or car than your neighbor.

"Now everyone wants to have a better coffin, too. And I'm making millions off of this."

Branson's client list reads like a Who's Who of the wealthy and powerful, including corporate big shots and snooty bluebloods who come from a long line of money.

"The attitude of my clients is: 'You can't just shove people like us in a pine box. We're better than that.'"

These sentiments are typical of those in the top tax bracket who don't care for the notion of death being the great equalizer. For many of the wealthy elite, the subject of dying has been something of an embarrassment. But no longer.

"Nothing disgusts me more than the thought of winding up as a rotting corpse," an 82-year-old female client explained. "I mean, how humiliating! But thanks to the luxury coffin's powerful air conditioner, I can stay looking fresh and beautiful well into the next century."

Most of these luxury coffins are tailored specifically to meet the needs and interests of their individual owners.

Constructed of the finest materials and fitted with the latest in technology, it's not uncommon for units to contain such features as mini-bars, cell phones and even television monitors for the deceased to keep a watchful eye on their surviving family.

Predictably, these coffins come with high price tags. Even the more modest units start at $250,000.

Some feel this is a ridiculous price to pay for a final resting place. One industry analyst notes, "What good is a CD player when you're dead? These rich buffoons are ignoring the fact that they won't be alive to enjoy any of this stuff."

But that's not stopping wealthy clients from paying top dollar for coffins that are as high-tech as possible. As one client noted, "I want to go in style, the same way I lived. And I'd rather spend my money on something meaningful like this than leave it to my greedy, no-good relatives."

"And dead or not, I still want to have an awesome sound system."

SOME clients have requested a satellite dish be installed atop their mausoleum so they can follow the stock market.

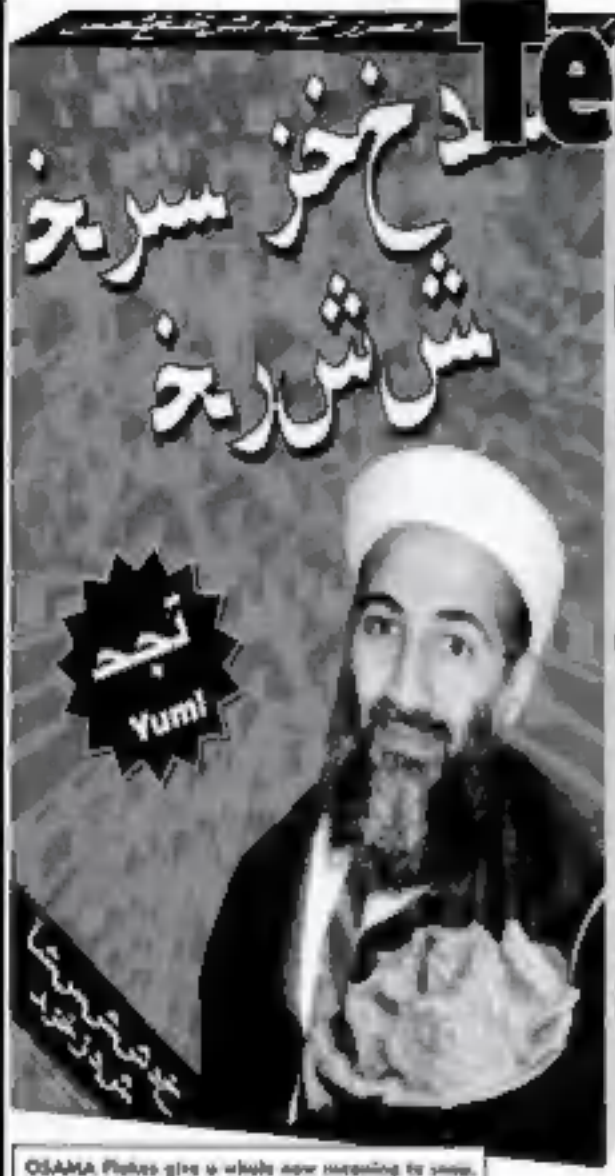
Terrorist junk food funds attacks on America!



OSAMA Pistachios give a whole new meaning to crazy, crackle and pop!

JERUSALEM — Middle East extremists now have something else to get fanatical about: Snack foods named after their favorite terrorist heroes!

Snackers on both sides of the political fence are munching on cookies, crackers, candy and cereals inspired by scum like Yasser Arafat, Osama Bin Laden and Saddam Hussein. And U.S. intelligence sources say money from these snack sales is being used to fund violence against America and its allies.

Egypt's top-selling snack is a cheese-flavored chip called Abu Ammar, which is Arafat's wartime alias. The front of the bag sports a picture of the Palestinian leader in his trademark Arab headdress.

"Everyone loves Abu Ammar," said a 13-year-old boy snacking outside his home in Cairo. "They're crunchy, and they even have a picture of Yasser Arafat on the bag!"

Not to be outdone, Israelis are happily stuffing themselves with Arafat-Free Cookies.

"They're a huge seller," said the owner of a Jerusalem grocery store where Arafat-Free is sold. "But to tell you the truth, I think people just like the name."

Here are the top snacks bearing terrorists' names:

Osama Pistachios: A huge seller among the terrorist youth who want to "be like Osama."

Saddam Suckers: Lollipops that outlast just about any other candy.

Qaddafi Krunch: Fruit-and-nut snack featuring Libyan bully Muammar Qaddafi.

Bin Laden-O's: Oat cereal; has companion brand Honey-Nut Hussein.

Frosted Amiri-Wheats: Cereal named for Uganda's ex-strongman Idi Amin.

Terrorist Trail Mix: Nuts, raisins and chocolate chips for kids to spell out anti-American diatribes.

THE companies that make snacks like Abu Ammar, left, and Jihad Bites, above, won't keep up with demand.

Other terrorist-themed snack treats:

Blow-Up Pops: Lollipops that promise "an explosion of flavor in your mouth!"

Jihad Bites: Mini-crackers filled with goat cheese.

Kandi Kaiser: A zesty accompaniment to Abu

Folks collect lots of oddball things, but this has gotta be the cleanest collection that I ever heard of.

One John collects hotel soaps and shampoos. His collection was gathered at lodgings from Motel 6's to the famous Waldorf-Astoria. Started in 1984, this soap collection numbers 948 pieces in all. "It's like showing off my children. Aren't they beautiful?" the proud collector told me in an interview.

Phew! Maybe if you'd actually use your collection, buddy boy, you could have REAL children to talk about!

Take out Osama's rocket with the WWN satellite!

LET'S blast Osama bin Laden's doomsday rocket to kingdom come.

Dear Editor,

I read your cover story on Osama Bin Laden launching his doomsday weapon into orbit, and it scared the hell out of me. After September 11, I wonder what this cracked-up madman will do next.

I am so worried about Osama's doomsday device, I even pulled out my son's telescope the other night and went up to the roof. I looked through it, and I was horrified by what I saw.

Sure enough, I saw something floating in space that looked an awful lot like Osama's rocket that you showed in your story.

I was wondering if you could use your new Weekly World News satellite to shoot Bin Laden's weapon out of the sky.

Ted H.

Coral Springs, Fla.

We are doing everything in our power to take that weapon down. We here at Weekly World News would take great pride in using our satellite to blast Osama and ruin his evil plans. We feel it is our duty as Americans!

Dear Weekly World News,

I saw your article about the dancing cockroaches in the July 23 issue and I thought it was disgusting! I live in an apartment building in New York, and I hate cockroaches. Absolutely HATE them!

Every time I see them, I crush them with my shoe. I just love to step on them and squeeze the life out of them. If I ever see those dancing cockroaches, I would whip out a can of Raid and kill them all.

They are dirty, dirty bugs and they are full of germs.

Edith H.

Brooklyn, N.Y.

Edith, those dirty cockroaches are going to be here long after we're all gone, so you might as well get used to them. They'll be dancing on our graves!

To Whom It May Concern:

I was very impressed by your article on the fat heroes. That was an inspirational story. It showed that just because someone is overweight, doesn't mean they can't be heroes.

I weigh 440 pounds myself, but I hope I can someday save some lives like the fat people in your story.

Tubby T.

Sheboygan, Wis.

Tubby, it's great that you want to help people. But you would probably be even more helpful if you dropped a few pounds. The less you weigh, the faster your reflexes would be, and the more stamina you would have. Before you can rescue any other people, there's a life you need to save first — your own, through proper diet and exercise.

Dear Editor,

The other night I went out to dinner with my wife at a local restaurant. Little did I know this was the restaurant featured in your article that has the food fights every Friday night.

No sooner did I start eating my entrée when I found myself pelted in the face with a coconut creme pie. My poor wife was smacked with a bowl of baked beans.

Then a plate of macaroni and cheese landed right in my lap.

I have never suffered such an indignity in my life. My poor wife, Gladys, had her string of pearls ruined.

The next day, I found a banana peel in my shoe. And do you have any idea how hard it is to get baked beans out of your hair?

That restaurant is a disgrace. It's awful how much food they are wasting every week.

Melvin D.

St. Paul, Minn.

Melvin, You are taking this food fight way too seriously. Our attitude is, let the chips (and the dips) fall where they may!

HOW TO TELL YOUR WIFE YOU'RE GAY!

SAN FRANCISCO — Coming out of the closet is never easy — and the hardest part is breaking the news to your wife that you're leaving her for another man! Depending on how you handle this ticklish situation, spilling the beans can bring you and your spouse closer together than ever — or incinerate your relationship once and for all.

By VICKIE YORK
Daily World Staff

Here, from experts, are some basic do's and don'ts:

DON'T invite your gay partner over for dinner one night and casually mention to your wife, "This is my lover, Steve."

DON'T feel obligated to create a big scene — Thanksgiving dinner at a table full of relatives isn't necessarily the best setting for coming out.

DO practice what you will say in front of the mirror. For example, "Honey, I have a great explanation as to why we haven't had sex in three years. I'm gay."

DON'T use euphemisms such as "You know, I always wanted to play for the other team."

DON'T be surprised if your wife has misconceptions about gays. If she says, "But you were so good in sports in high school," calmly explain that many top athletes are homosexual.

DO understand your wife may initially experience a sense of loss, guilt or anger. If she cries, throw things or tries to change the subject, don't interpret it as an attack on you.

DON'T apologize. Always remember, you haven't done anything wrong.

DO share poignant details about how you discovered your sexual orientation. For example, "I knew I was different when I was 9 and I had a crush on John Travolta."

DON'T relate play-by-play details about exactly what you and your partner do in bed.

DO make your wife feel better by dropping the names of respected business owners, professional people and athletes who are also gay.

DON'T let the discussion drag on if a heated argument erupts.

DO let your wife know that you still find her attractive and that if you were straight, you would definitely stay with her.

DON'T make your wife feel guilty. Let her know that it is not her fault that you decided you're gay.

DO be patient. It may have taken you years to accept your sexual orientation. Your wife will probably have a long period of adjustment before she accepts that she has lost her man to another man.

MEET FRANK . . .

WORLD'S SMARTEST CHIMP

By KAT CALLAHAN/Weekly World News

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Scientists have turned an ordinary chimpanzee named Frank into a genius who plays the stock market, knows more about computers than you ever will — and just got accepted into a major state university!

"I feel safe in saying we have actually created the world's smartest chimpanzee," boasts Dr. Anthony Metaxas, head of the research project that boosted Frank's brainpower. "His IQ has increased to almost 10 times what it was when we began the project a mere 18 months ago — and it hasn't stopped growing yet.

"This may be one of the most far-reaching achievements ever realized in intelligence research," he says. "It has incredible possibilities for advancing human intelligence, as well."

Since Dr. Metaxas's team began tinkering with Frank's brain, the chimp has:

- Made more than $35,000 in the stock market, which he tracks on the Internet and in several investment newsletters.
- Not only learned how to type — at 150 words a minute — but has written an actual novel.
- Achieved 150 on a state-certified IQ test, which got him accepted into a state university with a full scholarship.
- Recorded an almost-perfect score on the entrance test for Mensa, the international club for geniuses.
- Learned how to program a VCR to tape reruns of his favorite TV show, an animated cartoon called Grape Ape.
- Designed and built his own web site and chats on the Internet. Dr. Metaxas invites Weekly World News readers to sign on and join in so they can get to know the brainiac beast. (See accompanying story for details.)

RESEARCHER Dr. Anthony Metaxas

"He's quite fascinated by [illegible] him away from the computer at night."

Dr. Metaxas said Frank reached genius level after a series of medical procedures that included stimulating parts of the chimp's brain with electrical impulses.

"We noticed a remarkable improvement right away," Dr. Metaxas marvels.

"Three days after the first operation, Frank began typing simple messages to us. A week later he was writing to us in three different languages, even Latin."

A bank account was created for Frank containing a small sum of money in order to test his financial skills. The clever chimp began a series of lucrative trades through an online investment firm.

"If he keeps doing this well," Dr. Metaxas jokes, "we may not have to apply for any [illegible] financial permission of a top Eastern university, which Dr. Metaxas declined to identify.

The genius student will be majoring in business, with a minor in psychology.

There is even optimistic talk of sending him to graduate school for a master's degree.

Oddly enough, Dr. Metaxas says, Frank's stunning intellect doesn't help him with simple tasks.

"He just missed getting perfect scores on the IQ and Mensa tests because he forgot to write his name on the answer booklet," Dr. Metaxas reveals.

"Physically, he's not very coordinated," he adds. "Every time he tries to ride a tricycle he falls off — and that's a stunt that can be performed by a circus chimp.

"And he's not a very good climber for a chimp.

"The strangest thing, though, is he has no idea how to pee! Because

GALS' BIZARRE NEW ADDICTION —
PLUMBER'S CRACK!

By MICHAEL FORSTER

GOTTA HAVE IT! Some gals just can't get enough butt crack.

GOVERNMENT shrinks have identified a shocking new form of crack addiction: A startling 1 out of every 25 American women is hooked on plumber's crack!

You heard that right. Instead of being grossed out when a plumber bends over, exposing the top of his meaty derriere, these gals crave the sight — and will go to outlandish lengths to sneak a peak.

Researchers from the National Institutes of Health have found that the problem is widespread and deadly serious, with literally millions of U.S. women plunged into the depths of plumber's crack addiction.

"It's America's secret shame — no one wants to talk about it," says psychiatrist Dr. Terry Ebel, who's soon the soon-to-be released report.

"In the advanced stages, this addiction can lead to financial ruin as afflicted individuals spend a fortune on plumbers' fees to feed their habit.

"We have women who deliberately damage a kitchen fixture so they have an excuse to call a plumber. After they get their fix, they damage the fixture again, then go straight to the Yellow Pages to find another plumber.

"In one of the most extreme cases studied that figures in the report, an addict called 27 plumbers in a single month about the same leak."

The affliction strikes women of all ages, from fresh-faced young tweenukers to silver-haired sweet matrons who'd blanch at the suggestion that they harbor any curiosity about blue-collar backsides.

Twenty-nine year-old di

Psychiatrist Terry Ebel

nightmare of addiction. She admits the hankering for plumber's crack became all-consuming and ended up destroying her marriage.

"I just couldn't help myself. I'd stand there, gawking at that magnificent rear, blushing like a schoolgirl," the teary-faced mom of two recalls.

"I knew I had a problem, but I couldn't talk about it with anyone."

Arguments over the family's skyrocketing plumbing bill — which peaked at $6,900 a month — led her husband to file for divorce last November.

Psychiatrists think they've got ties to the bottom of the problem.

"Male buttock cleavage is the last frontier as an erogenous zone — women are very reluctant to admit they find it a turn on," explains Dr. Ebel.

Curiously, many women have no interest in the perky, well-toned buttocks of the male models you'd find in Playgirl.

"They yearn for a more rugged, macho, down-to-earth look — and the plumber, the last bastion of old-fashioned American masculinity, fits the bill."

The broader and dubbier the buttocks, the more appealing to addicts.

"The ideal for these women is a sprawling expanse of milky white flesh divided by a gaping, hairy crevasse," Dr. Ebel added.

The NIH report calls for more aggressive treatment of the disease, to try to wipe out the problem before it leads to marital and financial disaster.

Cindy B. is already getting help from a 12-step recovery program.

"Right now I'm just taking it one day at a time," she says.

72 PRUDE VIRGINS AWAIT SUICIDE BOMBERS!

MUSLIM bombers should look at the fine print before blowing themselves to Kingdom Come. It turns out that those 72 virgins you get in the afterlife if you die as a martyr will never "put out" — because they've sworn to remain virgins for all eternity!

That's the latest word from a top scholar who's closely studied the teachings of the Koran, the sacred book of Islam.

"The 72 blessed virgins are too holy to ever disgrace themselves by having sex with men," says Dr. [illegible] halts with no keyholes."

The holy book describes the women as "Beautiful like rubies, with complexions like diamonds and pearls."

"Unfortunately, the beauty of these virgins will only serve to torture the souls of those poor

MAN BUSTED FOR BARKING

A DAFFY DAD found himself in the doghouse when he started barking like a dog at his bratty kids — and he got tossed in jail for disturbing the peace!

But a judge found in favor of common sense, freeing Trond S. Hansen and declaring it was perfectly legal for him to woof it up.

Sources in Oslo, Norway, say a neighbor called police because he heard Hansen barking and thought a dog was attacking the kids. When the cops arrived, they charged Hansen with disturbing the peace, public drunkenness and child neglect.

Hansen resisted arrest and was thrown in jail. His kids were put in foster care.

The judge later dismissed the charges, saying, "The court is in doubt that the barking was so loud that it disturbed the peace."

Commenting on the doggy daddy's release, the neighbor said, "The next time that guy acts up, I'll just call the dog-catcher."

TOILET pit FLUSHES ships down the tubes!

UNDERSEA explorers have discovered the world's deepest hole — a night-marish pit in the ocean floor that sucks ships down like a hungry beast!

Known as the Abyss, the mysterious watery hole located off the coast of Belize is believed to be the final resting place of at least 400 vessels that have vanished in the area since the 1600s.

"We've found the remains of literally hundreds of ships that were pulled down into that hole like toy boats swirling down a toilet," said famous marine biologist Gregory Harkens of Miami, who joined a team of scientists and explorers on a recent dive into the perilous pit.

"The situation of the Abyss is absolutely horrifying. It is as formidable, powerful and as unexplainable as a black hole."

Located about 60 miles off shore, the marine cave measures roughly 1,000 feet in diameter and is at least 500 feet deep, say the explorers. It can be seen from a plane, looking like a perfectly round, whitish blue spot on an otherwise turquoise sea.

MARINE biologist Gregory Harkens.

Upon closer look, it is even more disturbing.

Encircling the pure hole are countless pillars of limestone," says Harkens.

"They look somewhat like teeth — very big teeth — and standing upright at least 30 divers have ventured over the years in that skipping craft.

The late ocean pioneer Jacques Cousteau visited the blue hole with the crew of his famous ship The Calypso in the early 1970s. He and his men bundled [illegible] and he later described it as the most "terrifying" place he'd ever ventured.

"The Abyss is an evil place — a place of death," the normally brave Frenchman said in one of his famous documentaries.

In 1997 explorers from the prestigious Smithsonian Foundation lowered the Abyss and were lost lost as to how millennia old artifacts in the depths. But the Cousteau team was the first to fully explore the bottom of the pit.

"When we got down to the floor of the cave it was eerily still," recalls Harkens. "There were sharks everywhere but they didn't attack. It was [illegible] watching [illegible] to see it all at the floor's [illegible] last.

At the very bottom of the Abyss a group surprise awaited.

"We found sculptures, statues, propellers and the bones of Spanish galleons," said the scientist. "There was evidence of an almost incalculable loss of human life. It's basically one big, huge graveyard down there."

Experts now believe that under certain weather conditions a "super whirlpool" forms above the Abyss and pulls down any unlucky ship that happens to be passing by. They're advising the governments of Belize to warn ships to steer clear of the area.

"The Abyss is the most dangerous place in the ocean," declared Harkens.

"It makes the Bermuda Triangle look like a backyard kiddie pool."

E.T.s PHONING HOME IS COSTING TAXPAYERS MILLIONS!

By MIKE MORSE/Weekly World News

DENVER, Colo. — Government officials have announced a plan to help Earth-bound extraterrestrials phone their home worlds — but it's going to cost a lot more than a quarter. Experts say these intergalactic phone bills are costing U.S. taxpayers millions of dollars a month!

The U.S. government has been housing hundreds of exiled extraterrestrials for years, but these lonely aliens have never had a way to phone home, until now. New construction has been completed on a network of costly communication satellites to allow them to speak to loved ones back on their home planets.

Hundreds of different life forms, many of which have come to Earth to escape the brutal regimes of their worlds, are currently living in a top-secret complex nestled somewhere in the mountains of Colorado. Sources claim that President Bush offered sanctuary to these visitors because of their unique talents, which could benefit mankind.

But so far, the only information they've provided are the blueprints for seven communications satellites that act as powerful transmitters to the home planets of our intergalactic guests. The cost of building and launching these satellites earlier this year was over two billion dollars.

With the satellites in place, the creatures can transmit and receive information to and from their home planets. And although each alien is given a three-hour allotment per day to speak with faraway friends and family, the tab still runs into millions of dollars per week because of the incredibly pricey equipment required to allow these to reach out and touch someone — or something.

The price tag for this project, code name: Operation: Really Long Distance, has grown so out of control that several congressmen are threatening to shut down the whole program.

"Enough is enough," complains one congressman, who asked to remain unidentified. "American citizens are paying through the nose just so some little green creep can catch up on the latest gossip on Betelgeuse Five. We've got to pull the plug on these satellites."

In spite of congressional threats, NASA has guests from racking up the astronomical phone bills.

Translations of their conversations reveal that the aliens talk about the same things humans do. How their kids are doing in school, the high cost of eating out and what's new with the family pet.

TAX EVERYTHING THAT'S FUN!

By KATE McCLARE/Weekly World News

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Inspired by New York City's outrageous, sky-high hike of its cigarette tax, a group of health nags says they'll start pushing for taxes on other things they think are bad for us — like fast food, sports cars, and heavy metal music!

"Americans have been indulging in unhealthy products for far too long," Fred MacNee, political director of Action For The People's Health, said. "Heart-clogging cheeseburgers, ear-splitting music, lung-poisoning gas guzzlers — we will not rest until all these and more have been eliminated from public consumption."

The group has an impressive track record. Outlaw smoking bans, dorky looking bicycle helmets and frustrating, child proof medicine bottles are a few of the achievements claimed by APH members.

Now the wacky warts have joined forces to get greasy fast food and unhealthy activities "taxed out of existence," MacNee said.

"APH is following the trailblazing example of New York City," he said. "If people insist on doing things that are bad for them, they'll just have to pay the price — literally."

New York City smokers are paying about $7 for a single pack of cigarettes, $1.50 more than the previous price of $5.50. The price skyrocketed after the city raised its tax from 8 cents to $1.50 per pack.

Smokers in the Big Apple are furious at the increase, which Mayor Michael Bloomberg said is partly intended to get people to kick the habit. MacNee called the approach "courageous and caring."

"Mayor Bloomberg and our other leaders in government obviously know what's best for their people," he said. "They understand that sometimes the only way to get people to drop a bad habit is to make it unpossibly expensive."

MacNee noted that several states already have "junk food taxes," which rake in about $1 billion a year. "But the effort doesn't go far enough," he added. We need a national tax, and we need to extend it beyond food."

MacNee said APH is not only targeting junk foods like cheeseburgers, hot dogs and pizza, but also valuable and dangerously addictive beer and liquor.

Also in their sights are gas-guzzling cars, which "pollute the air with both noise and fumes," smelly perfume, which can aggravate allergies, loud music, which can lead to hearing impairment, and skateboards, dirt bikes and other extreme-sports gear, which can cause serious injury and even death.

MacNee said some of the health tax money could be used to help manufacturers switch to making healthier products. "Cattle ranchers could be paid to produce tofu," he said. "And for those of us with a sweet tooth, candy companies could partner with the nation's farmers to sell carrot sticks."

Food industry executives scoffed at the proposal. "These health nuts are getting out of control, and we're getting tired of being chastised for giving the American public what it demands," said a spokesman for a top fast food restaurant chain. "Anything taken in moderation is perfectly safe."

"Besides," he added. "This won't going to work. Even if they cost $100 a pack, people are still going to keep smoking cigarettes and doing other things that are bad for them. You can raise the taxes as high as you want, but you can't stop people from having fun."

POLITICAL DIRECTOR of Action For The People's Health, Fred MacNee.

If THIS group gets their way, you'll be eating tofu burgers instead of cheeseburgers.

FAST CARS will be a thing of the past — most people will be riding bicycles.

THIS 'ROUND THE WORLD BALLOON TRIP

...it's a bunch of HOT AIR, says Ed!

AFTER SIX tries, big bucks billionaire Steve Fossett finally made it around the world in a hot air balloon.

I'm madder than Amelia Earhart will an empty gas tank over all those idiots in the media singing praises about that airhead millionaire Steve Fossett's balloon ride.

So he's the first rich guy to finally fly around the world by himself in a balloon after six tries?

Great! Now we don't have to hear about it anymore!

Who travels by balloon anyway? That's like being the first person to go by covered wagon to the grocery store, or me going to the local VFW on my riding mower (something I actually did once when my wife Thelma Jean lost my car keys).

Fossett's high-flying balloon time would have been better spent flaming over Afghanistan looking for Osama.

Now THAT'S risky!

America's need to real adventurers like Charles Lindbergh, John Glenn — and my personal hero "Lawn Chair Larry."

balloons to a lawn chair in 1982.

Dozens of "Lawn Chair" took scenic drinks, sandwiches and a pellet gun and went up about 15,000 feet before landing on seven power lines and blacking out part of Long Beach.

When reporters asked him why he'd done it, Larry said, "It was cool just sit around."

That quote's way better than Neil Armstrong's "one small step for mankind" quote, but you won't read Larry's words in any dull-blanked history book.

I don't know what billionaire didn't do it the hard way like another real hero did, my VFW and fellow Korean War vet buddy Clem Sneppen, who set a world record of sorts by driving 143 miles on his wheel rims.

That happened when he backed out of a rental car lot at 35 mph over one of those tire shredders during a little misunderstanding.

or of (Note, but that's about all the recognition he'll ever get, by guess!

It's high time we started recognizing real heroes, real men who set real records -- not with long-winded balloon rides and Guinness Book stuff like nonstop shipping rope for 72 hours, or picking their nose while standing on their head in a vat full of gelatin.

I'm going to start the Anger Record-Breaking Heroes Hall of Fame with my pal Clem as the first inductee.

And here are the ground rules:

Rule 1: You have to do it yourself and not have a bunch of overpaid grunts helping you out.

Rule 2: You have to do it on the first try, and with equipment in your garage, or that you can buy at any hardware store.

Rule 3: It has to be useful. Flying in a lawn chair and driving on tire rims or a rider mower is useful.

Flying weeks in a balloon in Australia is just stupid, especially when you can hop on an airline and watch Crocodile Dundee movies on the way over in just half a day!

That's it! Three simple rules that anyone but a bored millionaire can follow. Let's do it, America, and leave singing about balloons to that rock group, the Fifth Dimension!

New super-tomatoes cure cancer!

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Get ready for a real-life attack of the super-tomatoes! But don't worry, these genetically engineered tomatoes don't hurt people, in fact they're a tremendous boon to all mankind — because they wipe out cancer!

The mad plant maniacs, headed by top scientists at Purdue University working with the U.S. Department of Agriculture, provide [illegible] against deadly breast and prostate cancers, as well as other forms of cancer — and also battle a host of other illnesses, including osteoporosis.

This is because the lifesaving super tomatoes are [illegible] a key chemical called [illegible], the stuff that makes tomatoes red in the

"This may be the first example of using biotechnology to increase the nutritional value of a food," Professor Arlan Harris of the university's horticulture department, said in an interview.

Scientists have long known that a tomato rich in lycopene has major health benefits. One study of [illegible] found that eating [illegible] a week cuts prostate cancer risk in half. And a study released in June showed lycopene helps ward off breast cancer and osteoporosis.

But the super tomato, which is redder and lasts longer in the refrigerator than [illegible] tomato, is jam-packed with much more of the vital cancer fighting agent.

To develop the cancer busting super-tomato, the scientists inserted a yeast gene into an ordinary tomato plant. This resulted in a massive increase in the amount of lycopene in the fruit.

Such a quantum leap forward would have taken at least 15 years to achieve using conventional [illegible] techniques, added the expert. And it would have taken literally thousands of years of normal evolution.

Agriculture Department bigwigs are high on the new super-tomato and hope to make it available on supermarket shelves as soon as tests prove beyond a shadow of a doubt that it's safe.

"This type of product represents the next generation of genetically engineered foods," John Radke of the U.S. Department of Agriculture told a reporter.

"It will bring to the consumer's table important benefits that couldn't have been

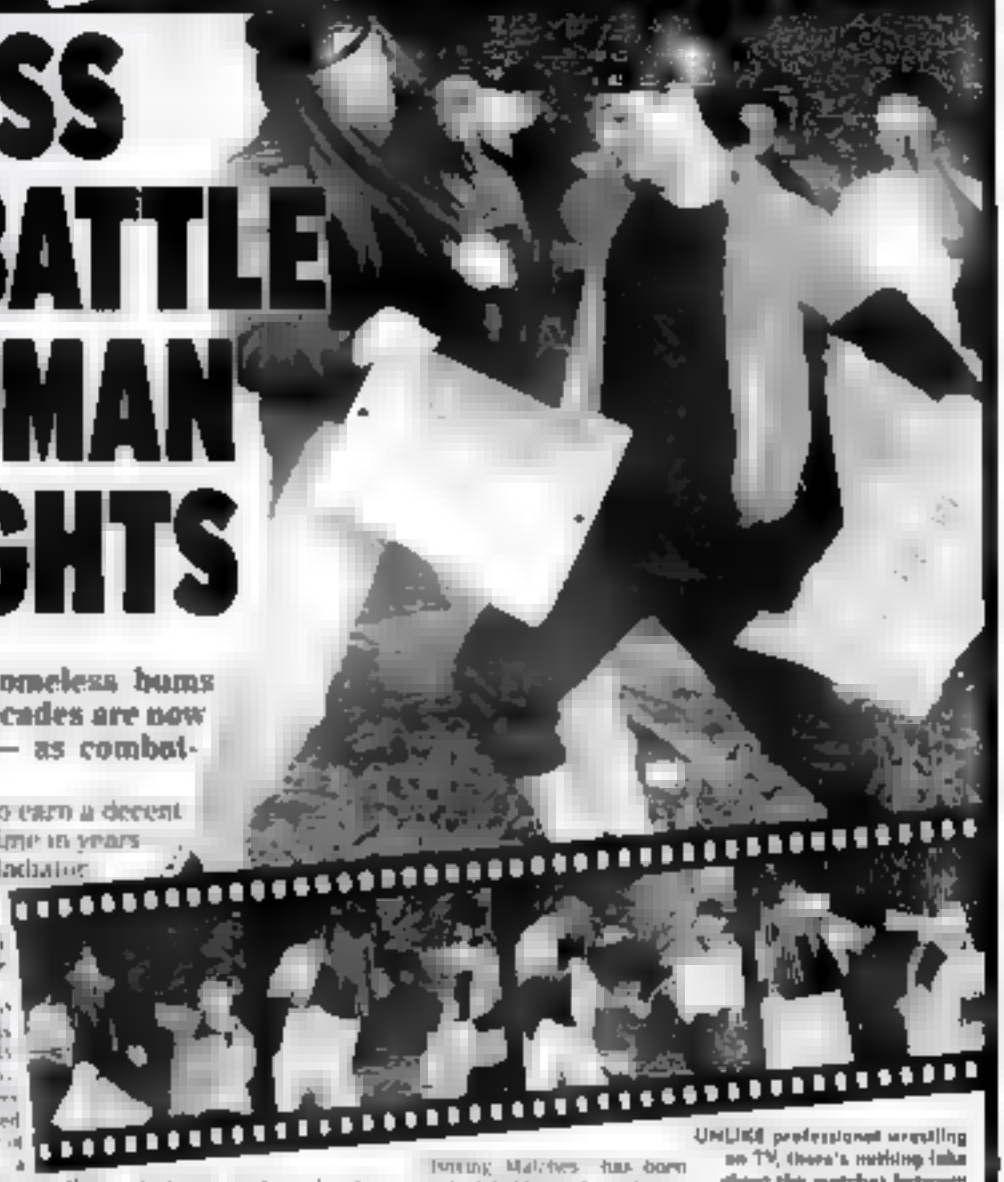
HOMELESS FOLKS BATTLE — IN HUMAN COCKFIGHTS



By GEORGE SANFORD, Weekly World News

TORONTO, Canada — Homeless bums who've been out of work for decades are now finding gainful employment — as combatants in human cockfights!

The grizzled vagrants are able to earn a decent wage — in many cases, for the first time in years — by fighting each other in makeshift gladiatorial battles staged on the street for the delight of cash-paying crowds.

The new sport, known as bumfighting, was profiled in a one-hour video called Bumfights, about hopeless people in Las Vegas who pummel each other for money.

The tape, which is available only through the Internet and has sold an estimated 300,000 copies, shows numerous bum rumbles, known as "bumbles" to aficionados.

Experts say that in big cities all around the country, the same thing is going on as more and more homeless Americans turn away from begging and try to find dignity in earning a living from the strength in their own two hands, feet and teeth.

But unlike professional wrestling on TV, there's nothing fake about the matches between the out-fisted bums, which feature times

Filmmakers [illegible] Larocca and [illegible] Beeson, who produced Bumfights and have promised to give 10 percent of their sales to a homeless charity, say they got the idea for the eye-opening documentary after they witnessed a knock-down, drag-out bumble firsthand.

"We thought it was pretty entertaining and would make good sense on a whole video tape," Larocca was quoted as saying in the Toronto Star.

The homeless fighters featured in the video have colorful ring names like Stinky Sam, Cash the Cat-Daddy, and Black Bear the Crack Addict. Many clearly relish the opportunity to demonstrate their prowess and woo prospective sponsors.

The sport has grown so popular that an underground tournament of Cardboard Boxing Champions has been scheduled for each new year, and Vegas bookies are already taking wagers.

But not everyone likes bumfighting. Social workers, do-gooders and self-appointed advocates for the homeless are busy thinking their bruises condemning both bumfighting and the video that glorifies the sport.

Unlike professional wrestling on TV, there's nothing fake about the matches between the out-fisted bums.

Bumfights are "exploiting people that are in dire circumstances," says Doris, a spokesperson for the National Coalition for the Homeless in Washington, D.C., told a reporter angrily. "It's completely harmful and it's abusive."

LOS ANGELES — In a city full of traffic jams, obscene gestures and gunplay, one motorist has made "road rage" a thing of the past thanks to his unusual mode of transportation — a tank!

Francis R. Meeker, a 39-year-old accountant, purchased the decommissioned combat vehicle at an army surplus auction and soon discovered he'd also won the courtesy and respect of his fellow drivers.

TANK owner, Francis R. Meeker

"Getting that tank was the smartest thing I ever did," Meeker declared. "I used to dread the hassle of driving to and from work in the busy city. But not anymore. Meeker claims piloting the armored vehicle has allowed him to go on the offensive, giving him newfound confidence in his driving abilities, along with a real sense of security.

"People on the freeway give me lots of room," he enthused. "I never worry about getting in an accident. And changing lanes is so much surprised by the dramatic increase in driver courtesy since purchasing the tank. Motorists who once hooted and shouted at him now wave — and some of them even salute.

"I get way more respect in my tank than I ever got in my '84 Escort," the accountant admitted.

"No one ever flips me the bird or yells mean things. As for being shot at, why should I worry? I've got armor plating. And I suspect my 15 millimeter shell cannon is a pretty strong deterrent, too — not that I'd ever use it."

Naturally, driving a battle tank to work has a few drawbacks as well. The vehicle's top speed is only about 45 miles per hour, forcing Meeker to leave the house much earlier in the morning than he used to. Visibility is also poor, as is gas mileage. And finding a parking space can be a problem due to the tank's massive size.

But Meeker points out an upside. "People no longer fight with me over spaces."

Public reaction to Meeker's choice of transportation has been decidedly mixed. Some see the tank as a patriotic symbol. Others find the sight of a lumbering armored vehicle on the California roadways downright ominous.

ENVIRONMENTALIST Ralph Marsden

"That gas guzzling monstrosity isn't a proper vehicle," environmentalist and carpooler Ralph Marsden complained. "It's a weapon! Somebody's going to get killed."

"If Private Pyle wants to play army, let him do it in the sandbox with the other kiddies."

Yet, despite controversy and criticisms, Meeker isn't planning on getting rid of his ocean machine.

"It's really changed my life," he said. "When I'm out there, cruising around in my tank, I

DUMB CLUCK BURIES 48 BABY CHICKS

BEGINNER farmer Daniel Kleiber turned livestock into 'deadstock'

. . . TO GROW CHICKENS!

Animal rights nuts are outraged!

Daily chicken would never have made it if dingbat Daniel raised it

TIPTON, Ind. — When New York stockbroker Daniel Kleiber left the Wall Street rat race to become an Indiana farmer, he didn't realize that he'd soon be facing five years in the slammer — but that's exactly what happened when he was busted for burying 48 chickens in his field!

By DENNY SPURLING
Weekly World News

Troubles began when he ordered a mail-order kit from the Tipton Hatchery for the 48 baby chicks he had bought a few days earlier.

"He sure didn't look like a chicken farmer," recalls Dr. Belinda Beaumont, a veterinarian and animal welfare specialist investigating the case. The hatchery people also told him they only provided good, honest stock and he ought to double-check everything anyway. They directed him to the place and he planted it in a 25-acre field and said: "That's where I plant 'em! Digs on Tuesday and see one of them babies!"

The hatchery owner was perplexed. Dr. Beaumont said: "Although he added that he thought about selling them some duck decoys because ducks are known more right-wing Republicans, he decided to call the state's animal welfare people instead."

SPECIALIST Dr. Belinda Beaumont

When Animal Control officials arrived, Kleiber admitted burying the chickens, but claimed he was only trying to dispose of them humanely.

"It's an obvious case of cruelty. I can just imagine those poor mommy and daddy chickens discovering that all their babies were buried alive. This man is a chicken killer, plain and simple."

The dimwitted perpetrator of this foul crime has paid a heavy fine, and faces a possible jail sentence.

"When our trial comes up I'm just gonna tell the judge the truth," Kleiber says. "I swear with God as my witness I thought chickens were supposed to be buried in the ground. I mean, I'm a farmer now, and I'm learning all kinds of new things every day. How was I supposed to know?"

Kleiber admits that he never read any books about farming. "But I figured, it couldn't be that hard. I mean, how stupid could it be?"

One irate neighbor summed up the community's feelings about Kleiber by saying: "He's the dumbest jerk to ever move to this area."

Neighbors first noticed that Kleiber seemed a little out of place when he tried to plow the fields all with his red BMW convertible.

"He got it stuck up to the fenders," recalls a local tow truck driver. "He just backed a two-bottom plow to the back bumper and just went a-chargin' into the wet bean stubble."

Any positive reinforcement would be appreciated. — Larry in Lala Land

Dear Larry: Sorry, honey, but you're not going to get any positive reinforcement from me. I wouldn't expect a Hollywood screenwriter to know anything about the real world. You probably haven't left your house in years. I gave up on movies years ago when they started doing [illegible] and giving work to too many ugly actresses like Julia Roberts and Sandra Bullock. However, our friends and relatives tell us timeshares are a scam and we just threw away our money. It seems like a good idea. What do you think of timeshares? — HayKay in Kettering

Dear HayKay: I don't like timeshares, and here's why: They're only there for one week out of the year and you don't know who's there the other 51 weeks. It's usually some smelly, smelly dirty, disgusting slob. I say timeshares are for people who are too cheap to buy a nice vacation home like I've got. If you're one of those cheap-os, you deserve the stained sheets and dirty silverware you're sure to find.

So far I've filmed myself eating a plate full of worms and sitting in a puddle of mud with my best friend watching me with a two-by-four. Is there anything else I could do that would convince them I'm tough enough to make the cut? — TV Survivor in St. Louis

Dear TV: Well, you could play chicken with a train. Or you could eat a plate full of poison ivy. Or [redacted] could even set yourself on fire and jump out of an airplane without a parachute. If you do any of those things, it should prove to the producers that you are as stupid and gullible as anyone else

CONFIRMED: 2 MISSILE

CAME FROM OU

By MIKE FOSTER
Weekly World News

Our planet is facing a terrifying new threat, warn scientists, who say hostile space aliens have developed a devastating new superweapon — and have already test-fired it at Earth twice!

Researchers from Southern Methodist University in Texas have recently determined that two mysterious explosions in the 1990s were caused by a pair of lethalite "cosmic missiles" that slammed into Earth from deep space.

"These are weapons of such awesome destructive power the human mind is almost incapable of comprehending it," said Dr. Leonard Stanek, a respected astrophysical teacher with the alarming new report.

"These cosmic missiles tore through the Earth at nearly a million miles per hour — 40 times the speed of sound — each packing enough energy to instantly vaporize human flesh.

"More alarming still, they appear to have pinpoint accuracy, giving adversarial aliens the power to target and terminate any man, woman or child in the world with a guided bullet.

"They can kill all of us — or any of us — at will."

Some scientists received their chilling conclusions after analyzing more than a million earthquake reports — eventually zeroing them for telltale signs of cosmic missiles striking Earth.

Experts identified two likely candidates. The first was on the morning of Oct. 22, 1989. Seismometers in Turkey and Bolivia detected an impact in Antarctica that delivered the equivalent of thousands of tons of TNT. Whatever it was, it burrowed through Earth and exited through the floor of the Indian Ocean near Sri Lanka just 20 seconds later — meaning the mystery object was traveling at an unbelievable 25,000 mph.

The second cosmic missile struck a month later on November 16, when seismic pickups on an expedition near Mount Erebus in Antarctica detected a blinding spark and blasted out of Antarctica.

Scientists believe that the ultra-advanced missiles were composed of a bizarre form of matter, called "strangelets," that physicists have theorized for decades.

Strangelets are 10 million times more dense than lead. A single fingernail the size of pellet would weigh more than a battleship. Just one strangelet missile could destroy a city.

Even the ultimate weapon.

"The greatest threat to the world today is not terrorism — it's these deadly cosmic missiles," declared Dr. Stanek.

"The greatest threat to the world today is not terrorism — it's these deadly cosmic missiles, packed with strangelets," declared Dr. Stanek.

But while the scientists who discovered the cosmic missiles say they're not willing to go that far.

Instead in address the issue of who, if anyone, fired the cosmic missiles, they confirmed that strangelets from space had indeed ripped through Earth, calling it

Pizza deliveryman mobbed!

'I WAS ATTACKED BY 50 LONELY GEEZERS AT AN OLD FOLKS HOME'

Each claimed him as their own visitor!

CAPETOWN, South Africa — A riot broke out at a rest home when a young man showed up to deliver a pizza — and was mobbed by lonely old folks, each one desperate to claim him as their own visitor!

The mayhem started when a delivery man dropped off a pizza that staff members at the Shady Rest restaurant luckily had ordered and one of the patients mistakenly thought he was her grandson visiting that night.

"Then one geezer after another realized he's not their relative Sophia," says nurse Lebusa Boyce. "They wanted cash so she'll break your legs. Thought he was Jack Williams or something."

Another nurse describes the panic as mayhem. "...a piece of cheese demanding a cardigan. The way they piled on, that poor kid, I swear it looked like a pensioners' orgy."

It was horrible, disconcerting, terrifying, Thomson said. "They were shouting at me, calling me by the wrong name, and I realized I'd be lucky to get out of the building."

The deliveryman was able to escape with minor cuts and bruises and made a speedy getaway in his delivery truck. But even after he was gone the situation continued to escalate.

"Other residents got in. By then we all had our hands up, we were ready to give it [pizza] away, but they chased down the old fuckwagon before I got back to it."

Luckily, order was restored before Shady Rest was understaffed and didn't have the manpower to host the supplementary sideswipe the patients to brave risk of creating an nearby car wreck.

Somebody from the kitchen and his friends were on hand with a wheelchair. First, before he became friends with the wooden spoon.

"They were under pressure, everyone [illegible] and for a while it looked like a demolition derby with wheelchairs."

But a quick-thinking waiter saved the day when she rang the dessert bell from the kitchen. "Nobody here knows [illegible] name," Boyce says.

She further explained that the dessert break created a distraction that lasted long enough to make the patients completely forget what had happened.

Within minutes, everyone began to complain about the [illegible] more than half of the residents had made some of their way back to their rooms, muttering how it had happened," she says.

Nurse Boyce later said, "We haven't had so many visitors since there's been world war around. The thing is, he was here. We won't be having any pizzas delivered here for a while."

DELIVERYMAN Scot Thomson was able to escape the melee with minor cuts and bruises.

CASANOVA COULD SEE THE FUTURE!

THE famous Casanova was not only the world's greatest lover, he was a scientific visionary who foresaw much of modern-day technology!

AMERICA'S SEXIEST PS[illegible]IC

I'm dying to be a Vegas stripper!

Dear Serena: I'm 17 and just got my GED. My dream since I was 11 is to be a Las Vegas stripper. My grandma was one in the 1960's and I've seen pictures of her glamorous sparkly costumes and the handsome men she would go with.

Serena, I can be almost my age and work off the highway at the Pink Kitty to get started in the business. It isn't fancy but it pays better than flipping burgers. Will I be a success as a stripper? — Starry-Eyed in Dallas

Dear Starry-Eyed: Keep your clothes on dear. You're too young to be taking it off anywhere but in the bathroom when you take a shower. My crystal ball tells me that you have a future in show business, but you need to have some patience. In early September I see both home for a new reality TV show coming to your area. They're looking for a fresh, young Midwestern teenage girl to be part of the cast. Just be yourself and I see good things happening!

Dear Serena: Recently at work, someone stole some jewelry from a desk drawer. The woman it was stolen from put a sign in the break room. It said that whoever stole the jewelry must return it within three days or a curse would be put on the person who stole it and their whole family for all eternity. Whoever stole it probably buried it already. Can she do that? Is she a real witch? People around here don't like that kind of thing. We think putting curses on people and their families is really mean. — Scared in Wilmington

Dear Scared: I read my tarot cards after putting your letter in my "Mysteries" basket and prepping over it. I sense that your co-worker does not have any magical powers, so you don't have to worry about a curse. But something about your letter still troubles me. I am picking up a dark aura from your letter. I am sensing secret feelings of shame. I could it be that you are the one who took the ring, or perhaps you know who did? Your aura will become much lighter if you come clean. Tell co-worker what you [illegible] and a heavy load will be lifted from your shoulders.

Dear Serena: I'm a 16-year-old boy and I read your [illegible] in secret because [illegible] mom says all books and magazines that aren't Christian are works of the devil. But I trust you and have a big problem I can't tell my parents or pastor about. There's a girl who lives next door and my mom says she's ill going on 28. Serena, she's the prettiest girl in our school, almost in the whole world, I think. Sometimes at night she doesn't close her curtains and I watch her change her clothes. I know this is evil but I can't help it. I get dirty thoughts. How can I get over my thoughts? I don't want to go to Hell. — Not Pure in Redstone

Dear Not Pure: Your dirty urges are natural for a young boy like you at the puberty. But I don't need a crystal ball to tell you that peeping on your neighbor is adding to the guilty shameful feelings you're having. But my crystal ball does tell me that your neighbor is interested in you and she'd be very embarrassed to know what you've been doing. You can trust me to gently tell her that she ought to keep her curtains closed without embarrassing her. I see a pure romance ahead if you take that first step. Try talking to her after church next Sunday and see what happens.

PERSONAL TO:

Desperate in New Castle: I have cast my healing light around you and your family. The light does not work by itself, though. Your continued optimism, despite your setbacks, will help power the light's energy.

Deaf Muslims in Clifton: You left your hearing aid at church. Ask your pastor to help you find it, though. And while you're at it, ask him if the church is looking for an organist. I think you'll be pleased by the heavenly music you're able to create.

Ambitious in Cody: The town's merger with Plain will make the family more receptive to your plans for enrolling in truck driving school. Happy highways!

Junkyard Dog in Malden: That old chest of drawers your wife wants to you throw out is really a colonial American antique under the green paint. It's worth a fortune!

THIS WEEK'S SIX LUCKIEST LOTTO NUMBERS

Weekly World News has purchased exclusive rights to the world's most powerful computer — and we use it to pick the six luckiest lottery numbers every week!

The Swiss-built computer, called Bright Green, has the ability to calculate which lottery numbers are most likely to come up each week, based on previous performances and established tendencies. The numbers are good for the week Weekly World News is on the newsstand.

The computer spits out numbers selected in lotteries across America over the past year to provide a statistical base for predicting future results. More value is given to the most recently selected numbers.

Using all available data, the computer picks the luckiest numbers

ORIENT 2 3 4 5 6 7

What's your secret message from the Fortune Cookie this week? It's easy and fun to decipher. Here's the key to decoding your message:

If the number of letters in your first name is 5 or less, subtract that number from 7. If there are more than 5 letters in your first name, subtract the total from 13.

Now take the result and find your key letter in the word ORIENT above. Starting at the upper left corner of the box at left, check each one of your key letters as it appears from left to right. The letters below each of your letters

GUY CONFESSES ON HIS T-SHIRT!

CHRISTOPHER Antos was a fugitive from the law — a fact he boldly declared right on his T-shirt!

The bright orange shirt announced to anyone who glanced at it, "Fugitive. You never saw me."

Unfortunately for the 26-year-old man, Indiana State Trooper Jerrod Sisko did see Antos — and his T-shirt.

When he pulled over the car Antos was riding in because the driver was speeding, off he raced.

The trooper told Antos he'll have to come down to the station because "Your T-shirt says you're a fugitive." Sure enough, the cop found Antos was wanted for stealing a car in Bexley.

The flagrant fugitive traded his wise-guy T-shirt for a cell as he sits jail-bait while waiting for trial.

CROOK CREAMED WHEN MASK MELTS OFF!

A MASKED gunman's victims saw right through his disguise — a pile of shaving cream that melted off his face during a failed heist!

Mickey Lyons coated his face with shaving cream and then used a squirt pistol to stick up a store in Huntsville, Texas.

The cream dripped off, and in a second he recognized him," shop owner Shelah Mims testified in court. "He's a regular customer."

Lyons's wacky crime took a serious turn when he grabbed a small child and threatened to shoot the tyke with the fake gun.

The cowardly crook ended up running out of the store, empty-handed.

He was convicted of armed robbery

. . . AS LIVING GODS!

THE FOUR unlikely gods, from left Dominic Testani, 38, Sal Kwiatchek, 37, Bob Kennick, 29, Ike Magone, 35, come bearing balls of thunder

ARAUCA, Venezuela — A bowling team of American tourists has given up life in the gutters of chilly Green Bay, Wisc., for a life of luxury in tropical South America where they are worshiped as living gods!

The four meat packers and members of the Panhandle bowling team are now revered as "the four mighty messengers of Sirasiecha" by the Curripaco Indians — a primitive tribe living on the border of Venezuela and Colombia.

"Miraculously caged the stars in the sky," declares Curripaco shaman Tupan Ibichugh, through a translator, "and he sent us

Space aliens stole my appendix!

WASHINGTON — Space aliens do a lot of tinkering with the bodies of humans they abduct — but their favorite operation is an appendectomy!

A high-tech U.S. Air Force report of 7,000 abduction cases worldwide since 1972 found that aliens are more likely to remove a person's appendix than perform any other single procedure.

"Appendectomies were performed in nearly 20 percent of abductions," says the report, which remains classified.

Miracle statue tinkles real urine

THE VATICAN has agreed to examine a religious statue that appears to "tinkle" real urine. The figure of a cherub, carved in the 15th century, has become a symbol of faith to devout Christians and has brought hundreds of pilgrims to the Basilica of St. Mark, where it is housed.

tried to KILL me!

MOSCOW — A decorated Russian officer serving at Chernobyl claims he was fired upon twice by a laser-gun-toting female space alien with a huge bum!

"The being had pointy ears and stood only about 4 feet tall, but her hindquarters were very large and round, like those of that American movie star Jennifer Lopez," Captain Vladimir Shushkin reported to his superiors after the unprovoked attack at a guard post.

But take the tale of the J.Lo E.T. with a grain of salt. Shushkin, who has since been relieved of duty and put on psychiatric leave, admits he guzzled half a bottle of vodka shortly before his Jan. 15 close encounter with the queen-size bejeweled extraterrestrial.

BRATTY KID DIES

— and becomes an even brattier phantom!

THE LAST known photograph of superbrat, Casper, before his entire body was destroyed in his bedroom in the dorm in 1925

CHRISTCHURCH, New Zealand — Frustrated paranormal investigators have dubbed the spirit of a 9-year-old boy who drowned in 1925 "Casper the Unfriendly Ghost" because he's a total brat!

Famed psychic researchers Howard and Anne Gayweather claim that in the three months their team has been conducting an investigation in the old farmhouse haunted by the plot-size poltergeist, the mischievous specter has:

- Knotched a league off a researcher's head and flushed it down the toilet.
- Repeatedly set the researchers' van on fire.
- Ripped a female assistant's skirt — as if knowing she was wearing no underwear.
- Posed for a video camera, allowing excited researchers to take the first known videotape of a ghost — then erased the precious evidence the next day.
- Suddenly manifested herself in shaving mirrors, giving all the men countless nicks.
- Screamed curse words into a microphone so loudly their soundmen suffered severe hearing loss.
- Tied to the researchers to the tail of the researchers pet terrier Bongo. The team's quiet rat.

"Poltergeists are well known for pulling play-ful pranks, but this little monster is just out of control," fumes Dr. Anne Gayweather, co-leader of the team of six investigators.

"Frankly, I wish that I could get my hands on the little rabbit later in the flesh so I could put him over my knee and give him a good whupping."

The Gayweathers believe that the storm tossed rug rat is the spirit of a boy named Casper Wardley, who once lived in the house and drowned in a pond by later.

"Because of the tragic circumstances surrounding Casper's death and his short life, I went there feeling sorry for him," Dr. Gayweather says. "But our séance quest research has revealed that the boy fell in the water while trying to drown a neighbor's rat."

The property has been abandoned since 1929, when the last of six families to occupy the haunted farmhouse fled with only the clothes on their backs.

KOOKY CASTRO SENDS ARMY ON A HUNT — FOR HIS SHOES!

MILITARY officials in Cuba have reportedly called off a two-day, nationwide hunt for dictator Fidel Castro's shoes. The search ended when the pair of badly scuffed brogues were found cowering in the communist leader's private cellar.

Castro, who has reportedly been staging only the occasional shows of virility, recently ordered at least 20,000 soldiers to scour the countryside for the shoes, calling their disappearance part of "an American plot," according to U.S. State Department sources.

OSAMA TO WEAPONIZE TOY PLANES!

TERRORISTS are still plotting to blow up passenger planes in their war on America. But this time, sources say, the cowards don't plan to risk their own lives — they'll be using remote-controlled aircraft!

Terrorism experts warn that Al Qaeda agents plan to pack toy planes with explosives and then fly them at airliners as they take off and land. They wouldn't have to sacrifice a single fanatic to murder the innocent passengers on board.

"This sizzling scenario, taking a child's toy and making it into a deadly weapon," reads a memo leaked by intelligence sources, "would result in a catastrophe."

Experts urged Americans to remain vigilant in the face of yet another plot. "At least we know what we're up against," one insider says.

OUTRAGE! COURT ORDERS WOMAN TO BE RAPED — BUT SHE'S TOO UGLY!

By AMBROSE CLARK, [illegible]

IN AN OUTRAGEOUS case of perverted justice, a court ordered a woman to be gang-raped — but the men refused to carry out the sentence, declaring she was "just too ugly."

"We tried to carry out the court's order," said a member of the four-man rape gang, which was appointed by a village court in Afghanistan. "But then we ripped off her burqa and got a good look at her.

"Immediately we fell to our knees and begged Allah to rip our eyes from their sockets, after the horror that surely will scar them forever!"

The humiliated 27-year-old woman wept after the rejection. "I'm glad they didn't rape me," she said, "but I hope they were really afraid of it.

"Now I know why my father always insisted that I wear the burqa," she said, referring to the head-to-toe gown that traditional Muslim women wear.

Sources say the bizarre case began when the woman was seen talking in public to a man who is not a male relative — which many strict Muslims consider to be a major violation of Islamic law. The village court ordered the woman raped as punishment.

Her family desperately tried to intervene during the court hearing. "I begged them," said her tearful father. "But they had no mercy.

"I blame myself," he cried. "My daughter did not even realize she was talking to a man! She can hardly see out of that little eye hole in the burqa, and she doesn't hear very well either. I never should have made her wear it."

Anti-human-rights workers around the world have expressed outrage at the case. One activist said she was "appalled that in this day and age a woman is still at the mercy of a morally bankrupt system in which her greatest crime is not knowing her place."

But the town official who carried out the court's sentence said he was glad the court intervened.

"I had no idea she was that repulsive," he said.

"Thank Allah they kept me from making the biggest mistake of my life."

PLO leader Gaw-aw Arafat stinking up peace talks!

Journalists have sniffed out the real reason why Israeli leader Ariel Sharon, U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell and other negotiators refuse to sit down with PLO chairman Yasser Arafat. The guy won't stop passing gas!

"The last time our people were locked in a room with Arafat, he stank up the whole conference room — I was almost asphyxiated," angry Sharon told an aide, according to an underground Jerusalem newspaper, Kibut.

"I'll be damned if I find myself trapped in close quarters for hours on end with that human stinking again."

ARIES

Mar. 21 – Apr. 19

Remember travel plans that will separate you from loved ones in the week ahead. Unfortunate events could demand your personal touch.

You'd willing your talents doing things that are fun but not personally rewarding. The number nine is significant.

This weekend, pull out the stops and let the good times roll. You deserve a break.

TAURUS

Apr. 20 – May 20

Don't let busybodies bog you down as travel matters this week.

Keep your eyes on the road to success. Your generosity has completed you to overcome problems that would have floored others. Yellow looks to be lucky as do the numbers 13 and eight.

A spirit-lifting vacation may loom a bit s well deserved. Gather friends and friends for a weekend or two.

GEMINI

May 21 – June 20

Your self-assurance comes to handy when you are called on to lead in a tricky situation this week. An inspirational idea may pop into your head after you receive an e-mail or phone call.

Green is lucky for you. Wear it and Lady Luck will smile on you.

A friend may ask you for help this weekend. Don't cancel all your plans, but give as much help as you can.

CANCER

June 21 – July 22

Your tendency to be fair could be tested this week as someone you consider undeserving gets rewarded. Keep your feelings to yourself. Be as she will get their just rewards later.

An embarrassing incident may require you to make an explanation. Pick a date.

Wearing white and paying attention to the numbers 22 and six will pay off!

LEO

July 23 – Aug. 22

Energy and confidence should be at an all-time high this week, so make advantage of the situations to solve problems. A word of caution: Taking overconfidence could make you do something you'll regret.

Romance is highly possible and you may find it in a completely unlikely setting.

A touch of gold or yellow in your clothing will generally help.

VIRGO

Aug. 23 – Sept. 22

Self-confidence is the key to success this week. Associates may be a little less trustworthy than normal but your judgment is solid as a rock.

If things need doing, do them your self. Go with your instincts.

Blue is your lucky color this week. A phone call from an old friend or distant relative will cheer your world. It's a good week. Beware though of the number 41.

LIBRA

Sept. 23 – Oct. 22

Friends may lighten your burden this week as you have a busy schedule. Take each task as it comes and you'll wind up in good shape.

A promising offer may come from someone who has been out of touch. Trust your instincts and if it involves the number 13, it's a sure thing.

Pay attention to a pal who needs your help. It will pay off in the long run.

SCORPIO

Oct. 23 – Nov. 21

Step on top of things this week. You may experience confusion in the next few days. Your ability to quickly assess your position and respond will benefit you.

Jealous folks may gossip about you but your standing with friends is secure.

Add a touch of purple to your wardrobe for luck. A surprise gift and the numbers eight and three mean being any pleasure later in the week.

SAGITTARIUS

Nov. 22 – Dec. 21

Use your imagination this week and tackle something creative. You will be pleased with the results.

All signs say big things are in store for you. Improvements at home may get a new ring to your life!

Watch for the number 30 and a new friend to give you new luck! A chance encounter outside the home will lead to an unexpected surprise.

CAPRICORN

Dec. 22 – Jan. 19

An interesting opportunity might come your way this week. Seize it! Get expert advice, but don't waste time.

Your sense of loyalty could create problems when someone you trust tries to take advantage of your generosity. Weigh them and carry on.

A weekend away promises new fortune. Look to the color turquoise for enhanced luck.

AQUARIUS

Jan. 20 – Feb. 18

An exciting new challenge may be coming your way in the week ahead and you should be prepared to act.

Trust your pals when the chips are down. Boredom could cause problems as you strive to complete an important project. The numbers 51 and 7 figure in a happy future. A family squabble will ease after you get an important phone call about finances.

PISCES

Feb. 19 – Mar. 20

If you're not having any fun, it's because your life is too structured. Paint new colors on your beige wall of respect ability and let your hair down this week.

Listen carefully for a signal that may steer your life into a new direction. Use caution on any sudden offers this week but may start to unravel career uncertainties.

Consider blue a lucky color.

If your birthday is this week...

If your birthday is this week. This year can be filled with happiness if you're willing to take a few risks.

Your career should also be high, enabling you to tackle jobs and achieve goals that seemed out of reach before.

WORLD'S YOUNGEST BLACK BELT IS 9 MONTHS OLD!

By MIKE MORSE
Weekly World News

[illegible] — An age when most tots are just learning to crawl, 9-month-old Garrett Presley is kicking, spinning, and leaping through the air like a miniature Bruce Lee!

"He's performing moves that take most martial arts students years to perfect," says Tony Jung, owner of a local karate studio. Tony even presented the infant with a black belt earlier this month, despite the fact that Garrett has never taken a formal lesson.

"I've seen the kid knock a grown man off his feet in under 5 seconds," explains Jung.

Tony Jung

"And he broke a wooden plank with one hand while holding his bottle in the other. I had no choice but to give him the belt."

So how did this eight pound and a half pound baby learn the moves that have earned him the neighborhood nickname "The Karate Kiddie?"

Garrett's mother, combination worker Shirley Presley has a theory.

"I love Jackie Chan movies, especially the fight scenes. I watched them all the time while I was pregnant with Garrett," says Shirley. "Then, about a month or so before Garrett was born, I started feeling a lot of rhythmic kicking inside me. She he was working on a karate routine in there."

But it wasn't until a few short months ago that Garrett began showing off his amazing abilities. According to his parents, he was a perfectly normal tot until one fateful evening in their living room.

"We were just sitting around doing some channel surfing," explains Shirley. "We happened to stop on a scene in a Steven Seagal movie where he was breaking up some bad guys. All of a sudden, Garrett started kicking and spinning, knocking over tables and lamps."

"He broke right through a chair leg with his foot. Ever since then, we're afraid to turn on the television when he's around."

Shirley and her husband brought their child to Jung's karate studio for an evaluation, and the martial arts master was stunned at how far the tyke had progressed without any training whatsoever. "I've had students who've been training for years who aren't as advanced as this 9-month-old boy," Jung says.

Shirley Presley

Because of Garrett's extraordinary physical prowess, the Presleys are afraid to let him play with other children his age.

"If another kid tries to take a toy away from Garrett while he's playing with it, he'll flip the poor little bugger across the room," laments Shirley.

Jung noted, "One time the baby even flipped his father. You wouldn't think a toddler could throw a 240-pound man, but the little guy used his dad's own weight against him – a classic martial arts move."

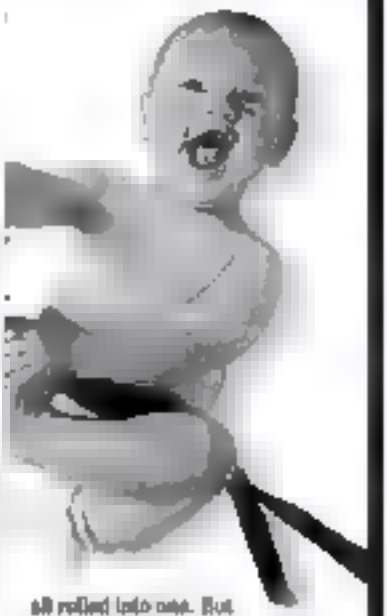
Jung concluded, "If they provide him with formal karate training, this kid could become the most amazing martial artist anyone's ever seen. Bruce

THE KARATE Kiddie can knock a 240-pound man over with his flying kick!

HI-YAH!

ABLE to break wooden planks with his ferocious karate chop, Garrett Presley is an athletic marvel.

'Karate Kiddie' can smash FIVE wooden planks with one chop!



all rolled into one. But if he doesn't learn discipline, he might just end up a pint-sized bully."

BARRETT is already capable of beating bully grown adversary partners.

CAT KILLED IN CASTRATION CONFUSION

A TWO-YEAR-OLD lawsuit paid the ultimate price when a Norwegian vet castrated the wrong cat yesterday.

The bewildered vet remembered the cat's owner when he dropped the cat. Lucy, off for its surgery. The Norwegian words for "delivered" (yesterday) and "killed" (today) and also for "castrated" (castrated) and "dissected" (dissected) are almost identical in pronunciation, which seemed to be the root of the confusion.

"We suppose the loss of this loved cat and will have all future requests for castration carefully checked," said the vet.

TESLA'S POSITIVE ENERGY PLATE GENERATORS OFFER MULTIPLE BENEFITS

[illegible] Tesla [illegible] low-tech [illegible] developed and tested. Known as Tesla's Positive Plate Generators—or simply Purple Energy Plates—these small but ultra powerful plates harness [illegible] electricity of the universe.

TESLA believed that everything in the universe is made up of energy and vibration, and that each basic element of the known universe emits varieties of energy at different rates of vibration.

TESLA'S Purple Energy Plates are to help [illegible] raise their vibrational rates. The plates' structure of the plates has been aligned with man-made equipment. The atoms and electrons are in resonance—or in tune—with the basic energy of the Universe. They function as "transceivers," creating a field of energy around themselves that will penetrate any material [illegible]

THIS energy is reportedly very beneficial to the life force energy of all living things. It is claimed that the Purple Energy Plates have been beneficial in curing and physical healing, reported by many who have tested the alleged healing power of the various sized Purple Plates.

ENERGY PLATE BENEFITS

- Relief from migraine headaches
- Decrease in joint swelling, muscle pain, knee and neck tension
- Relief of nausea
- Enhanced energy
- Improved sleeping patterns
- Depression and stress decreased
- Craving for alcohol and drugs diminished
- Purification of water
- Enhances the brightness of food and the taste of wine
- Advances healing with the use of Polaroid photos

DEAD OR ALIVE?

THESE one-time ubiquitous stars used to be as familiar to us as members of our own families. We'd watch them on TV every week — sometimes every day. We grew up with them. But — as bizarre as it may seem at their ages — some are dead. Others are alive. Can you tell which is which? Can you tell who's thriving and who's just barely hanging on? Answers at bottom.

Card No. 3: Empress
CAREER MATTERS

Love: There is someone in your workplace who would like to get to know you on a personal level. Look for a small sign from this person, then ask him or her to lunch.

Money: Nothing can stop the momentum you've just started. From here on, it's full speed ahead on your financial track.

Health: Don't let stress on the job wear you down. Your boss knows you're a hard worker; it's not necessary to work through your lunch hours or stay late every night.

Card No. 1: Magician
SELF-EMPOWERMENT

Love: You have the magical power to create the kind of relationship you want simply by defining it in your own mind. All things are now possible for you as the Magician.

Money: You are on solid financial ground for the near future, but low-risk investments now will pay your best dividends. It's a great time to buy a home or property.

Health: Consider volunteering to be a test subject for medical research in the area that concerns you. Not only will you help others, you'll learn a lot about yourself.

Card No. 5: Knight of Swords
CHARGING FORWARD

Love: If single, someone is about to walk into your life who is used to being in control. This person may look impossible but is irresistible. If committed, your relationship is about to get kicked up a notch.

Money: You are due for a promotion or transfer that will result in more money. If necessary, assert yourself to get what you deserve and you'll be well rewarded.

Health: If surgery is needed, it will be successful, as will any diet or exercise regime you start. This is also a good time to begin a program of stress reduction.

Card No. 4: Strength
SUPPORT

Love: If committed, you have an unbreakable bond with your love. If single, you will never encounter very many people who will make you feel like you're invincible.

Money: As if by magic, the money you need will come to you. It may be a gift, a loan or a new job offer, but grab it quickly, then use it wisely.

Health: You have physical stamina that can beat all new illness going around and a mental stability that keeps you balanced. Any health problems you have will be cured.

Card No. 2: 6 of Pentacles
APPRENTICESHIP

Love: Singles will enter into relationships with which they have no previous experience. If committed, you are about to enter new territory, like a change of roles or parenthood.

Money: A new source of income will be offered to you which you are a genius. Try it . . . you'll like it! It's an excellent time to get training for a new career.

Health: The theory of mind over matter could really work for you now. Just focus on your problem with

AMAZING ANIMAL 'TAILS'!

Pill turns vicious pit bull into poodle!

By KATE McCLARE/Weekly World News

BRUSSELS, Belgium — A vicious, murderous pit bull was transformed into a sweet-tempered pet with just a few doses of a new antidepressant for dogs — and its owner is snarling over the change!

"I got a pit bull for security — not to fetch my pipe and slippers," snapped dog owner Johann Peeters, 32, an auto mechanic.

"Now if someone breaks into my house, the little wimp will probably just try to lick him to death!"

But Peeters' neighbors say they're glad the 3-year-old pit bull has been tamed. "It was a monster that would attack anyone who came near it," said a woman who's suing Peeters, claiming her cat was torn to shreds in her own yard when Hans snapped his leash.

Postal workers are so terrified of Peeters' dog, they refuse to even deliver to his home — Peeters has to pick up his own mail down at the post office.

When Hans escaped from the house one day and almost mauled a child on the sidewalk, animal-control officials ordered Peeters to get treatment for his dog or give him up for execution.

Peeters' veterinarian got Hans into a clinical trial for a new animal drug similar to the human antidepressant Prozac.

After only three doses, the researchers say, Hans had a complete personality change.

"Virtually overnight," reads the researchers' report, "the dog went from snarling and drooling when a stranger entered the room, to wagging its tail in positive anticipation. He allows himself to be petted and eagerly seeks to have his belly rubbed and his head scratched, reacting with all the enthusiasm of a normal dog."

The researchers explain that the drug works like Prozac to regulate the brain chemical serotonin, which affects mood. A lack of serotonin can cause aggressive behavior, they say.

"Dogs usually attack out of fear," said a researcher. "The medicine reduces fear, so the dog is less apt to bite."

But Peeters complained that the drug has transformed his savage guard dog into a wimpy, passive pooch. "They might as well put him to sleep," he grumped. "What good is he now?"

PIT BULLS like this are being turned into pussycats with the help of antidepressants.

EAGLES mate in the air. Louis XIV of France only bathed twice a year. Over 10,000 birds a year die from smashing into windows.

That's just a sample of the astonishing trivia that editors and reporters at Weekly World News have unearthed while researching all the terrific stories you read in our paper every week. Here's more:

● Former Los Angeles Lakers coach Pat Riley obtained a trademark for the term "three-peat" in 1988 when the team was poised to become the first team to clinch three straight NBA titles since the Boston Celtics' eight title streak ended in 1966. While Riley, now head coach of the Miami Heat, trademarked the term for use on shirts, jackets and hats, it was the idea of Byron Scott, who was a member of the Lakers, and now the head coach of the New Jersey Nets.

● The artistic halo has been around since the time of the Greeks and Romans, and lowered into Christian art in the fourth century A.D. There is a halo code: Round halos signify saints, a cross within a halo is used for Jesus Christ, a triangle halo signifies the Trinity and the square halo denotes saintly living people.

● The first steamship to cross the Atlantic Ocean was the 320-ton paddle-wheel steamship Savannah which went from Savannah, Ga. to Liverpool, England in 1819 after a journey of 27 days, 11 hours.

● Some Persian rugs may last as long as 500 years before wearing out.

● Catherine II of Russia kept her wigmaker in an iron cage in her bedroom for more than three years.

● Julius Caesar, Alexander the Great and Dostoyevsky were all epileptics.

● Henry Cavendish, an 18th-century English scientist who was the first person to calculate the weight of the earth, was painfully shy and could barely speak in one person — never to two. He was so timid in the presence of women that he communicated with his female servants by notes only. If one crossed his path in his house, she was fired on the spot. He built a separate entrance to the house so that he could come and go without meeting anyone. In the end, he insisted on dying alone.

● Henry Ford was obsessed with more than cars — he also had a thing for soybeans. He once wore a suit and tie made from soy-based material, served a 16-course meal made entirely from soybeans, and ordered many Ford auto parts to be made from soy-derived plastic.

● In the 1980s, the media revealed that North Pole explorers Robert Perry and Matthew Henson had fathered children by Eskimo women during their years

In the summer of 1994, international film star Sophia Loren signed a multimillion-dollar deal to lend her name to promote a line of furs. Animal rights activist and former French film star Brigitte Bardot lambasted Loren in the media for the endorsement. Bardot attacked Loren in a public letter. It stated, "Even if your financial situation motivates such a gesture, it is degrading, repugnant, lamentable and unworthy to accept bloody money derived from animal hides."

● He said it: In the July 12, 1963 issue of Time magazine, French President Charles de Gaulle made the following observation: "Treaties are like roses and young girls. They last while they last."

● English soldiers were nicknamed "Tommies" during World War I because the example name on the forms soldiers were required to fill out was Thomas Atkins, the U.S. equivalent of John Smith. The name first appeared in 1815 when sample forms for soldiers showed where their signatures should appear. Rudyard Kipling also helped popularize the term "Tommy" in his poems and stories.

Over 80 percent of India's population is Hindu. While Hindus worship a few major gods, there are also millions of minor gods. One Hindu sage noted that there were over 330 million gods in Hinduism.

Star Trek's Mr. Spock had green skin because of traces of copper and nickel in his blood.

● King Alfonso of Spain (1886-1931), was so tone-deaf that he had one man in his employ known as the Anthem Man. This man's duty was to tell the king to stand up whenever the Spanish national anthem was played, because the monarch couldn't recognize it.

● Henry VIII's second wife, Anne Boleyn, had six fingers on one hand. She wore special gloves all her life to hide her deformity. She also had three breasts.

● In the spring of 2000, it was reported that a 25-year-old Tehran transsexual, who had just undergone extensive surgery to become a woman, said he wanted to change back to a man after realizing just how poorly women are treated in Iran.

● The 1998 blockbuster movie Titanic lasts 3 hours and 14 minutes. The actual ship took 2 hours and 40 minutes to sink after hitting an iceberg.

● Entertainers who were boxers in the early days of their careers include Roy Clark, Bo Diddley, Bob Hope, John Huston, Martin Lawrence, Ryan O'Neal and Rod Serling.

● "Little Miss Sure Shot," Annie Oakley, had all of her gold shooting medals melted down, then sold the gold and gave the money to charity.

● King Charles VIII of France, who ascended the throne in 1483, was obsessed with the idea of being poisoned. As his phobia grew, the monarch ate so little that he died of malnutrition, circa 1498.

● King Charles VII, who was assassinated in 1167, was the first Swedish king with the name of Charles. Charles I, II, III, IV, V never existed. To add to the mystery, almost 300 years went by before there was a Charles VII.

● Hippocrates, who is considered the "Father of Medicine," once suggested a woman with a flat bosom could enlarge it by singing loudly and often. (Hmmm . . . it seemed to have worked for Dolly Parton.)

● Actress Tallulah Bankhead endeared herself to the male members of the film crew of Alfred Hitchcock's Lifeboat. During filming, the controversial actress stopped wearing underwear. The cast had to climb a ladder to get into the boat, which was in a large studio tank.

● "Typhoid Mary's" real name was Mary Mallon, and she was blamed for spreading typhoid to at least 1,300 New York City residents in 1907 alone. She continued to spread the illness by working with food, and using assumed names, until she was placed in permanent detention in 1915 until her death in 1938.

Gerbils are the only animals born with horns. Both males and females are born with bony knobs on the forehead.

Actors Robert Redford, Steve McQueen, and Paul Newman all turned down a contract offer of $4 million for the starring role in Superman. Little-known Christopher Reeve was paid $250,000 for the part.
